Sleep-ins and National Minimum Wage Regulations

There have recently been a number of legal challenges made through the Appeal Tribunal with regard to wages paid to workers who do sleep-ins.

The Tribunals have concluded that workers must be paid a minimum of the National Minimum Wage for every hour of the sleep-in and not a flat rate 'allowance'.

Some of the arguments put forward by companies on why workers have been paid below the minimum wage include:

- Time spent sleeping should not be paid.
- If sleep-in payments are added to the salary and divided by the entire number of hours worked, workers are averaging more than the minimum wage per hour.
- The payment for sleep-ins constitutes an allowance and is not therefore subject to National Minimum Wage regulations.

However, tribunals have ruled:

- Because workers are on the premises, must stay on the premises, and cannot leave, they are 'working' for the entire period and whether or not they are asleep for any period of the sleep-in is irrelevant.
- Because sleep-ins do not constitute salaried work but rather, 'time work', hours and salaries cannot be averaged out and National Minimum Wage must be paid for each and every hour of the sleep-in.
- Allowances are appropriate for certain things like working in a hazardous atmosphere. They are not the appropriate/legal payment for a sleep-in and therefore, National Minimum Wage regulations apply.

If this affects you then you should lodge a grievance for unlawful deduction of wages.

Your Regional Officer/ Workplace Reps have a template grievance for you to use. The internal process must be followed before we can lodge tribunal claims on your behalf.

Your claim may be back-datable for up to six years. In the case of Esparon t/a Middle West Residential Care Home v Slavikovska, the claimant won over £15,000 from their employer in backdated sleep-in payments.

Unite will only represent workers who are members of Unite so if you are not a member, now is the time to join!
