All workers have a right to safe working environment

By law, employers must provide a safe and healthy workplace.

There are detailed regulations in place intended to protect all workers from exposure to dangerous substances (such as diesel exhaust fumes) in the workplace and these are called "The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 2002" or COSHH for short.

Help inform workers about this important topic

Find out more about diesel fume risks and how to protect workers on our website, where you can download guidance sheets, posters and flyers.

By raising awareness now we can protect the health of current workers and future workers!
